Providing Free Menstrual Care Products

Does Your Brand Claim to Be ‘Socially Aware’?

Foodservice leaders foster relationships with their customers. They move beyond a standard retail transaction to something much deeper.

Do you emphasize social responsibility?

Providing free menstrual care products in restrooms holistically aligns with these noble goals.

The problem

You have created a welcoming community — a gathering place in line with your social mandate. Then, unknowingly, you asked her to leave.

Who? A mother, sister or daughter. The statistics speak for themselves. 86% of women have experienced the unexpected start of her period while out in public spaces without needed supplies. Then she found a restroom stocked like it's the men's room—no matter what the door said.

Think about it

Other than a historically male-dominated industry handing down purchasing patterns that weren't as much cruel as they were uninformed, how would one account for menstrual care products not being considered on par with soap, hand towels, or toilet paper?

When you accept that it is just one of those things with which time has caught up, then it's much easier to say, “It's time to make change.”

In Restrooms Is A Necessity, Not A Luxury.

What we are advocating

At Hospesco Brands Group, We believe we are called to make a positive social impact on the communities we serve. Years ago we moved beyond menstrual care product positioning and joined what were quiet voices advocating for restroom equality. Now we are part of a chorus. As the movement has grown, laws have sprung up in state after state. From colleges and universities to restaurants and other public spaces—facility managers and administration have adopted as FREE and UNIVERSAL the availability of healthy, safe, and clean menstrual care products. Your customers are talking. Listen. Think. Do.

86% of women have started their periods in public without the supplies they needed.

79% of those who had no supplies improvised with toilet paper, paper towels, or another makeshift fix.

Just 48% obtained their supplies from a dispenser in a public restroom (and only 8% say that, in their experience, do those dispensers work all the time).

Restroom equality in public places means equipping them such that everyone is invited to stay. You couldn't imagine any public restroom without toilet paper, towels, and soap. Similarly, women should find readily accessible tampons and pads in every restroom outside the home, including your establishment.
